https://www.familysearch.org/

One of the newest features on the FamilySearch Family Tree mobile app will allow you to have multiple screens open while you're doing your research, much like using multiple tabs in an internet browser. This can allow you to be more effective as you navigate your family tree and compare information from searches with your ancestors' profiles. This new feature is still being tested and should be fully functional in a week FamilySearch recently published its 2 billionth digital image of historical records. Yes, that's billion with a "B." The full NZ Gazette is available on our computers at the APFHC. You can find helpful instructions on how to use the Gazette in the red folder. The New Zealand Gazette is the official newspaper of the government and is produced every Thursday by the New Zealand Gazette Office, Department of Internal Affairs. This project includes the years 1860, 1870, 1871, 1873, 1882-1888, and 1890-1894. Gazettes are full of material that can be of use and interest to family historians. They include notices about: * bankruptcies, * appointments and releases of receivers/managers, * appointments and releases of liquidators, * meetings and last dates by which to prove debts or claims, * cessations of business, * partnerships, * land transfers, * charitable trusts, * friendly societies and credit unions, * incorporated societies, * changes of name, * justices of the peace, * native land court dealings, * native adoptions * military notices, * nurses, doctors and teachers registers, and *general notices Thanks to Kapiti Branch

Illegal adoptions in Ireland Between 1946 and 1969 there were 126 illegal adoptions arranged in

Ireland by the Catholic agency St Patrick's Guild according to an apology by the Irish government, but one adoptee featured in this article in The Guardian claims that the number could be in the thousands.

The first law to regulate adoption in Ireland was passed in 1952, but it has been estimated that over 100,000 children have been separated from their parents through adoption or fostering since 1922 according to the Adoption Loss website_run by The Natural Parents Network of

This might seem irrelevant to most readers of this newsletter, but if you take an autosomal DNA test you may well be contacted by people who were adopted, and are trying to trace their birth families - please do your best to help them.

To mark International Archives Day on 9 June, the Commonwealth War Graves Commission (CWGC) and UNESCO announce the addition of the Commonwealth War Graves Commission's Casualty Archive to the UNESCO UK Memory of the World Register.

The Register, which promotes the sharing of knowledge for greater understanding and dialogue, recognizes records of national significance.

The archive documents the details of the 1.7 million men and women of the Commonwealth forces who died in the First and Second World Wars.

This includes over 300,000 separate documents detailing the registration of the graves or memorials of the men and women of the Commonwealth forces who died in the First and Second World Wars.

CWGC Archivist Andrew Fetherston said: "It is a huge honour for the Commission's Casualty Archive to be recognised by UNESCO for the UK Memory of the World Register."

The archive will be formally added to the register at an inscription ceremony on 19 September 2018. The records include Grave Registration Reports, which record the burial locations and basic details of those individuals, such as their name, service number, rank, regiment, unit and date of death, and Burial Returns, which provide information as to where their remains were recovered and how they were identified.

They also include Headstone Schedules, which were used to produce the final permanent headstone, and Final Verification reports.

This rich seam of information will serve as an invaluable resource to any family historian hoping to learn more about a lost relative who may have fallen during the World Wars.

Family history website Findmypast has released the second phase of its suffragette collection to mark the 100th anniversary of women gaining the right to vote.

It added over 22,000 records from The National Archives, including Home Office and Metropolitan Police records of its surveillance of the suffragette campaign and raids on headquarters.

Findmypast has also created new transcriptions of thousands of 1911 census returns, where many women protested by either spoiling the form or listing 'suffragist' or 'suffragette' as their profession. In addition, it indexed the 1866 women's suffrage petition and added 14 suffrage newspapers to its newspaper collection.

ScotlandsPeople adds 2,400 free maps

More than 2,400 historic maps, plans and drawings from the National Records of Scotland are now available for free on ScotlandsPeople.

The maps were previously published via projects such as ScotlandsPlaces, but this is the first time they have been released on the National Records of Scotland's own website.

The collection includes manuscript and printed topographical maps and plans covering four centuries, with large amounts of estate and railway plans, architectural drawings, and engineering drawings, particularly of ships, railway engines and rolling stock.

The collection can be searched by year, place name or reference number.

To view it, researchers need to be registered ScotlandsPeople users, but they do not need to buy credits on the site.

FamilySearch adds new collections of American records

FamilySearch has added five new collections of American family history records to its database.

The collections, consisting of 816,658 records and images altogether, are New Jersey naturalisation records (1796-1991); Washington County, Ohio newspaper obituaries (1884-2013); Kansas cemetery abstracts; Sevier County, Arkansas death records (1914-1923); and records of Japanese Americans interned at Minidoka Japanese Relocation Centre from 1942 to 1945. In addition, FamilySearch added existing records to its collections of Southern District, New York naturalisation records (1942-1945) and Idaho southern counties obituaries (1943-2013).

LDS Library, Salt Lake City. USA

My 2 weeks in Salt Lake City was awesome! I have 255 images saved to a flash drive and a whole notepad of written records. It is so easy being able to read the films on computer. Much more control over the image.

The Library is very busy with people coming and going constantly. There are books and films as well as what is available on computer. Access to some websites is also available. There are lots of volunteers who specialize in different areas, and are able to help

I enjoyed my time there so much that I must go again. let me know if you are interested in joining me.

Eating in New Zealand in the 1950s

- * Pasta had not been invented.
- * Curry was a surname
- * A takeaway was a mathematical problem.
- * A pizza was something to do with a leaning tower.
- * Rice was a milk pudding, and never, ever, part of our dinner.
- * A Big Mac was what we wore when it was raining.
- * Brown bread was something only poor people ate.
- * Tea was made in a teapot using tea leaves and never green.
- * Fish didn't have fingers in those days.
- * None of us had ever heard of yoghurt.
- * Healthy food consisted of anything edible.
- * People who didn't peel potatoes were regarded as lazy.
- * Indian restaurants were only found in India.
- * Cooking outside was called camping.
- * Seaweed was not a recognized food.
- * Sugar enjoyed a good press in those days, and was regarded as being white gold.
- * Prunes were medicinal.
- * Surprisingly, muesli was readily available, it was called cattle feed.

pieces

- * Pineapples came in chunks in a tin; we had only ever seen a picture of a real one.
- * Water came out of the tap, if someone had suggested bottling it and charging more than petrol for it they would have become a laughing stock.
- * The one thing that we never ever had on our table in the fifties...was elbows! Whanganui Branch April Newsletter
